

BIOGRAPHY

Alex Aiono

“Walter Taumata”

Alex Aiono can be seen starring in Netflix’s “Finding ‘Ohana,” produced by Oscar nominated Ian Bryce. It reached #2 on the Top 10 Most Watched in the US on Netflix and has an 85% on Rotten Tomatoes.

Alex recently filmed a featured guest role opposite Tim Robinson in Netflix’s hit sketch comedy series “I Think You Should Leave,” produced by Party Over Here. Next up, Alex will join the cast of the upcoming Disney+ series “Doogie Kamealoha, M.D.” for creator Kourtney Kang and exec producers Jake Kasdan and Melvin Mar.

As a musician, Alex has been steadily expanding his fan base since he began writing and recording at age 15. After nearly a billion views, 500 million streams, Top 10 hits of his own, sold-out tours around the world, starring movie roles and crafting songs for other platinum artists, his unique calling as a multi-hyphenate creator embraced Alex on his twenty third birthday. Determined to stay entrepreneurial and independent, Aiono has released songs both with the biggest majors and as an indie.

However, the Phoenix born/Los Angeles based talent pushed himself to journey into his own musical eccentricities to create an unpredictable genre hybrid steeped in cathedral size gospel truth telling, stark folk instrumental simplicity peppered with hip-hop swagger, alternative ambition, and pop bliss. Traversing the sounds and scrapes that shaped him, he properly introduces himself on his 2020 independent Album, The Gospel at 23.