

Elizabeth Allen Rosenbaum
Director / Co-Executive Producer

Rosenbaum is a DGA Award nominated film and television director with film credits including "Aquamarine," and "Ramona and Beezus," which starred Joey King, Selena Gomez, Ginnifer Goodwin and Sandra Oh. She recently wrapped the musically themed film, "Purple Hearts" which is based on the popular novel of the same name for Netflix. Purple Hearts is starring Sofia Carson and Nick Galitzine and will be released in 2022.

Rosenbaum has directed a myriad of television projects. Her pilots she's directed and executive produced have all been picked up to series and include "BH90210," "Spinning Out," "Pretty Little Liars: The Perfectionists," and "The Kicks." Other television credits include "Dead to Me," "The Exorcist," "Vampire Diaries," "All American," and "Empire."

Rosenbaum graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Cornell University and then studied at the USC cinema school for her graduate work where she was awarded the Jack Nicholson Award for the strongest directing candidate in her class. Her short film "Eyeball Eddie," starring Martin Starr, M. Emmett Walsh and Michael Rosenbaum launched her career.

Rosenbaum currently resides in Los Angeles, California with her husband and son.