Joel Collins is an executive producer for season two of "Doctor Who."

Collins joined the production company Bad Wolf in 2017, helping to launch the "His Dark Materials" trilogy with Jane Tranter and Dan McCulloch. To date, he has produced 21 episodes of "Doctor Who."

He is currently in post-production on "The War Between The Land And The Sea," the "Doctor Who" spinoff starring Russell Tovey and Gugu Mbatha-Raw.

Collins began his career in 1992 as a modeller and creature designer on "Babe," "The Flintstones," and "Muppet Treasure Island," and gained experience at the world-famous Henson's Creature Shop in London. He went on to become an award-winning production designer, playing a key role in the creative team Hammer and Tongs, designing the films "The Hitchhikers Guide to the Galaxy" and "Son of Rambow." His role evolved from designer to editorial creative following his close collaboration with Charlie Brooker on the award-winning anthology series "Black Mirror."

Collins has won multiple awards for production design, VFX and titles, and he brings his vast creative experience to the shows he now produces.
