

Niles Fitch
"Tuma"

Niles Fitch stars as Tuma, a charismatic second-born royal and Secret Society hopeful in the upcoming Disney+ original movie "Secret Society of Second-Born Royals." Tuma's super-human ability is vital to the team's success, but his self-centered nature needs a lesson in empathy.

Fitch is likely best known for his role as Teen Randall on the hit drama "This Is Us." Additional onscreen credits include "Army Wives," "Tyler Perry's House of Payne," "Law & Order SVU," "Best Friends Whenever," "Mistresses" and "Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt."

An Atlanta native, Fitch followed his passion for connecting with others through stage, print, commercials, television, film, and voice over. As a child, Fitch was featured in many print ads and commercials. At 9 years old, Fitch made his theatrical debut as Young Martin Luther King, Jr. in the musical "I Dream."

Ready to take his career to the next stage, Fitch relocated with his family to New York City and was cast as Young Simba in Disney's "The Lion King" North American Tour in 2011. While on tour, Fitch won the Denver Post Ovation Award for Best Supporting Actor in a Touring Show.

Sadly, Fitch's father passed away in January 2014 from lupus nephritis. Fitch is an advocate of grief programs and lupus awareness and his charitable work includes participation as Celebrity Ambassador for A Caring Hand and Spokesperson for Kate's Club. Additionally, on a mission to find a cure and educate others about lupus, Fitch is a Celebrity Ambassador with Lupus LA.

In his spare time, Fitch loves playing video games, bowling and watching and playing football and basketball. He's also developing his skills in photography and looks forward to expanding his acting career to directing.