

BIOGRAPHY

Taylor Rees

Director

As a documentary director and cinematographer, Taylor Rees is driven by an insatiable curiosity to explore and tell the stories beneath the surface.

Infusing her passion for adventure into her work around environmental and humanitarian issues, Rees brings new perspectives and deeper public understanding to the complexities of climate change, biodiversity, conservation, human rights and environmental justice. She received a master's degree in environmental management from the Yale School of Forestry, where she led the Yale Environmental Film Festival before moving into a career as a full-time director, producer and shooter.

Her recent short documentary film, "Ashes to Ashes," became Oscar® qualified after winning 27 film festival awards on its circuit. She has shot and directed pieces for clients including National Geographic, The North Face and the United Nations, and she is a Sony Artisan photographer.
