

Terry Hu
"A-spen"

Terry Hu plays "A-spen," a super-intelligent, telepathic Alien who, after arriving on Earth, finds the uncommon emotion of love entering their bloodstream, in "ZOMBIES 3," the third installment in Disney's hugely successful franchise.

Hu is a queer, non-binary, Asian American actor. Despite being born and raised on the east coast, they always felt drawn towards Los Angeles, moving there the first chance they could get, to attend UCLA. Though tempted by the school's renowned theater program, Hu decided to major in Neuroscience instead — a decision asserted by their parents and solidified through their own desire for a "safe" career path.

With that goal in mind, Hu eventually got into the top physical therapy programs of the nation after graduation...only to ultimately turn them down (after much soul-searching) to pursue their lifelong dream of acting.

From there, Hu went on to win the 2018 ABC Digital Talent Competition and has starred as the lead in a number of shorts since then, including Americanized (2019), which became Oscar-qualified in 2021 after winning Best Dramatic Short at Cinequest Film Festival. Despite giving up the potential for a "safe and steady" career, Hu knows this path is what they were always meant to be on.
